“Clearly written, fascinating in its details, and convincing in its arguments, Brady’s book provides the first in-depth environmental analysis of Grant’s, Sheridan’s, and Sherman’s campaigns in the South. The Civil War will never seem quite the same again.”
—J. R. McNeill, author of Mosquito Empires: Ecology and War in the Greater Caribbean, 1640–1914

“This is a really fine book, rich in the kind of detail that explains the lived-in quality of a place, deeply researched and broadly contextualized, with writing that is often graceful and a pleasure to read. Remaking Wormsloe Plantation is a contribution to scholarship on the environmental history of plantations and place as well as a book that will appeal to a popular audience.”
—Mart A. Stewart, author of “What Nature Suffers to Groe”: Life, Labor, and Landscape on the Georgia Coast, 1680–1920

“The Blue Ridge forests, and the human communities they have sustained, have found in Newfont an historian who deftly captures their cultural significance and environmental import.”
—Char Miller, author of Ground Work: Conservation in American Culture
