

RACE in the Atlantic WORLD 1700–1900

Emphasizing comparative and transnational approaches, Race in the Atlantic World, 1700–1900 focuses on the development of, and challenges to, racialized inequality in Atlantic culture, with a particular focus on the Americas. Books in the series explore the evolving meanings of race, slavery, and nation; African identity formation across the Atlantic world; and struggles over emancipation and its aftermath.

Race in the Atlantic World, 1700–1900 is published in association with the Library Company of Philadelphia's Program in African American History.

"A dramatic and human narrative of a nearly forgotten time—when the quest for cotton dominated American commerce, and the expansion of slavery corrupted the American soul."—Douglas A. Blackmon, winner of the Pulitzer Prize for Slavery by Another Name

To Live an Antislavery Life

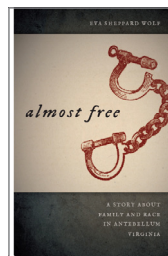

Personal Politics and the Antebellum Black Middle Class

Erica L. Ball

Paper, $22.95 | 4350-1
Ebook, $22.95 | 4467-6
Cloth, $69.95 | 2976-5

"Ball drives a stake into the heart of the tired argument that much of the aspiring black middle class in the antebellum North turned its collective back on the plight of its enslaved southern brethren in an inward-looking quest for uplift, respectability, and local political rights. Ball draws upon many of the same sources often cited in support of that argument—prescriptive conduct literature, domestic discourse, newspapers, convention debates, and cultural productions such as the Anglo-African Magazine. However, by placing these sources in conversation with slave narratives and interpreting them in fresh ways, she is able to demonstrate persuasively that, for free blacks, self-advancement could be a revolutionary, even subversive, act and the strong family unit could serve as the essential site for building race consciousness and fighting slavery."—Joanne Pope Melish, author of Disowning Slavery: Gradual Emancipation and "Race" in New England, 1780–1860
