

SOUTHERN FOODWAYS ALLIANCE

Studies in Culture, People, & Place

The series explores key themes and tensions in food studies—including race, class, gender, power, and the environment—on a macroscale and also through the microstories of men and women who grow, prepare, and serve food. The series presents a variety of voices, from scholars to journalists to writers of creative nonfiction.

The series is a collaboration of the University of Georgia Press and the Southern Foodways Alliance at the Center for the Study of Southern Culture at the University of Mississippi.
