

STUDIES IN SECURITY AND INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

The University of Georgia Press in collaboration with the University of Georgia's Center for International Trade and Security and Department of International Affairs created the Studies in Security and International Affairs series to publish outstanding scholarship on some of the most pressing challenges of the twenty-first century.

We are particularly interested in work that presents important new perspectives on the crises in American foreign policy and global governance; democratization, civil society, and the rule of law; rising powers and regional hotspots such as the Middle East, Asia, Africa, and Latin America; new security threats, including terrorism and responses to it; defense policy; postconflict reconstruction; multilateralism and international institutions; and the U.S. role in the world. Books in this series draw from the fields of foreign policy, international relations, security policy, and comparative politics. The series crosses disciplines and attempts to bridge gaps, including those between the academy and government and between nations and "civilizations."

"The risky and unpredictable transformation in the early 1990s of the Soviet Union into the Russian Federation and many new independent states had numerous heroes in media headlines. But there were others working far away from the spotlights to resolve one of the greatest dangers our planet faced: the risks of WMD proliferation and the spread of weapons expertise. This is the fascinating story of the ISTC in Moscow, an organization that for two decades played a major role in mitigating those risks."—Waclaw Gudowski, Royal Institute of Technology in Stockholm and Former Deputy Executive Director of the ISTC
